This extension does what it says. Pagico is a task manager, in the traditional sense. It allows users to create multiple lists of tasks and links between them. It is most useful when managing the timing of multiple tasks. You can add task notes to each task. Each task can have a due date or a task completion date. Pagico for Firefox Contacts: This extension allows to import and export address book data. You can add, view and edit contact information for each of your contacts. The import format is very flexible. Apart from having to deal with Chinese, Japanese, Korean, Russian and Arabic localizations, you can freely choose your own format for names, emails and phone numbers. After import, you can even create new entries for each imported person without having to worry about losing information. Pagico for Firefox Notes: Note-taking is handled with the help of the Firefox extensions. You can save notes by typing them into the search box and then applying the add-on. This feature is very convenient but it has some limitations. Once a note has been saved, it cannot be deleted, however, you can choose to hide it from the extension's view. Pagico for Firefox Files: This extension allows you to manage your files. You can create and open folders. You can create and edit metadata about each file you open in Pagico. You can view your files by date, popularity, title and note information. Pagico can also sync your files using the FTP protocol in real-time. Locate Pagico for Firefox: The extension also provides a preview window. This is handy when you are trying to find the application in your system. To install this add-on, simply download the.xpi file directly from the official site for Linux users, or by clicking the button below (for Windows users). When maximized, the window does not fit the screen, meaning your task list is constantly opening and closing. In addition, you will be able to see an icon on the browser toolbar and your task list.
