What's New in the?

Carroll is a small Windows application whose purpose is to help you set the screen resolution for every user account. Simple layout. Configure settings. Change the screen resolution after the logon mode. Restores the desktop resolution at the next logon. Carroll lets you change the screen resolution for every user account. Its use of a single folder to store a list of favourite apps provides a neat and easy-to-use interface, but its features remain quite limited.

Outlook Express: A common task for many Windows users, Outlook Express excels at finding email and managing your contact list.

Other email clients: A basic text-based email client is nothing to write home about, but there are several highly advanced clients out there that pack a whole bunch of features.

PIM tools: Windows users know about a core set of applications; time to meet a few more. It's also a good idea to consider a cross-platform client, such as Thunderbird, if you're a true mobile worker.

A personal calendar: Whether you prefer one with bells and whistles or a plain layout, a calendar allows you to record your activities in advance.

A to-do list: We already mentioned one (but it's useful all over the place), but a full-featured to-do list is a highly useful program to have to-do lists and reminders scheduled in advance.

A browser: The best browser for Windows is currently Internet Explorer, but the standalone version, Firefox, is free and available for all major operating systems.

WinZip and WinRAR: You probably won't use these to compress files, but they are useful utilities for filling up external storage devices.

Media players: Windows comes with default media players (but they're often slow and lacking features), so you'll need to add the ones you like most.

Norton Antivirus 2011 includes a new feature where you can schedule tasks to Norton and let it automatically notify you when you visit a website that's infected with a virus. The feature was introduced this week after a beta build of the anti-virus software is available to the public. In a phone interview, Norton's spokesperson, Dan Grossman, said it's a logical addition to the program's existing abilities and the fact that when users' computers are infected by a virus, it's important for them to know right away so
