However i have no idea how to proceed. EDIT2 I tried to add the same key to the manifests of previous.app files also. EDIT2 FULL UPDATE: I solved the problem. It had nothing to do with importing the key ring from iTunes Manually adding the same key to the manifest. After I just excluded the.app file with: .*\. it worked flawlessly. I believe this was caused by Changing the build target for the.app file to 2.0 (I updated it to 3.0 before I posted this question) and Somehow the key was somewhere in the.app file, as the earlier release had the old version of the key Now the question remains, how can I exclude it from the.app file. A: I was able to exclude it (app file, not bundle) with the following in my build settings. Under "Local Architectures" I excluded all the architectures except "armv7" Under "All Configurations" I only built the Release configuration For the Debug configuration (Debug Architecture) I had to ensure that "Export symbolic information" was unchecked. This allowed me to build the Release configuration without errors. For the binary Release I had to delete the.app file that was generated in ~/Library/Developer/Xcode/DerivedData/ Hope it helps. A: I made it working by following below 3 steps: 1. In your info.plist file you should have this structure: I added new key (Found on other answers) with same name on my apple ID with value Excluded from export. It helped me to exclude.app file from build process. Also make sure you manually add same key with same value, (What was the original problem?) Delete the.app file manually from your Application folder Build using Xcode.
